Investment Manager's Comment

The month of March was characterized by a certain amount of unrest on the stock markets even before the big tariff storm. Falling US equities and a weak dollar made our defensively positioned fund, which has little exposure to the US market, look good. We sold Franco-Nevada because the royalty stock had reached fair value. We also sold Centerra Gold, although in this case we had to revise the estimated fair value downwards due to excessive investment plans. Lululemon was a similar sale, as the growth rates we had expected could no longer be achieved due to the ongoing slump in the US business. We sold Swatch Group for similar reasons and out of continuing frustration with the stubborn management. We bought two new positions in the pharmaceutical sector: Novo-Nordisk is now "quality at a fair price" and Medpace is an attractive service provider to the industry. Two other new purchases were the liquidator market Ross Stores and Teleperformance, an outsourcing service provider for call centers. The market is afraid that the AI boom will make Teleperformance's call centers obsolete. But it could also be another opportunity for rationalization.
